An Object Lesson in " The Evening World's "Demand for Reform.

THE EVENING WORLD inaugurated, one reck ago to-day, its battle for the opening obliged by ironclad rules of trustees and ispitors to stand unnecessarily out in the ot and cold. THE EVENING WOULD has these children in front of school-houses in various parts of the city, soaked with rain d shi ering from the raw morning air. all because they came a few minutes early to avoid the much-dreaded " had mark."

Why this state of things should continue exist and what reason there is for the Ward Trustees failing or refusing to abolish this cruel and needless custom has not been satisfactorily exp sined, and though several the School Commissioners, including have publicly favored the opening of the school-house doors at an earlier hour, and have promised their aid in bringing about neb-desired recorm, the fact remains that many Ward Trustees have totally igored this public demand, and children, as nsual, are forced to huddle on the sidewalkall sorts of weather till the rules permit

At Grammar School No. 69, on West Fiftyfourth street, which contains 2,000 pupils, no change was discernible in the condition of affairs as compared with that of last Mouday. In fact there was evidence that the Ward Trustees did not intend to adopt any measures that would tend to relieve the erious consequences certain to result from the children being kept out in the wet and

When an Evenino Wonld reporter passed the school-house at 8 o'clock, several groups of children were buddled up close to the gates waiting for the opening of the school. Their little noses were blue and their faces Their little noses were blue and their faces blanched by the chilling air, and they were stamping and beating the hard sidewalks with their feet in an effort to keep warm. Janitor Baswait, when the hands of the big clock on the stable across the way pointed to 8.15 o'clock, slowly opened the doors of the girls' department, and the shivering little ones hurred into the building. Then the buys' department doors were fluing onen, and the duty of that functionary was apparently discharged.
